	Description and justification of the request	Changed effective date from 8/15/2024 to Fall 2024. administratively correcting effective date to proper naming conventions. ASC. 9/27/2024.	Changing range of required concentration hours from 21-24 to 21-30. Changing range of elective hours from 27-30 to 21-30. Education programs at the University of Arkansas Fayetteville are revising programs to meet the requirements for the yearlong residency required by the Arkansas Department of Elementary and Secondary Education. Proposed changes are to adjust AECTBS program core due to the AECTBS-AGED program change proposal.
	Reviewer Comments		Ikulcza - Fri, 22 Nov 2024 19:02:56 GMT - Updated submitter information and tweaked verbiage regarding hours from concentration requirements (per conversation with dean's office). Ikulcza - Fri, 22 Nov 2024 20:06:08 GMT - This proposal goes along with the changes submitted for the AGED concentration, although we do not need to route it through the same approval steps, since only the AGED concentration is a licensure program. Ikulcza - Tue, 17 Dec 2024 22:21:32 GMT - Adjusted reason for program modification to align with AECTBS-AGED and updated workflow to match; this ensures both program proposals move in tandem through the approval process. See the concentration CIM block for appropriate ADHE/DESE paperwork.

	Description and justification of the request	Admin update to convention of Effective Catalog Year. Admin update to convention of Effective Catalog Year.	Changes to the proposed program of study include: add AGED 31603 to replace AGED 31602 and AGED 31601; add AGED 4750V Internship in Ag Education (6 sch) in the fall semester of year 4; remove 6 sch of general electives from program of study. Program Goals and Objectives

The Anthropology Department at the University of Arkansas presently offers two degree programs to undergraduate students—the BA (Bachelor of Arts), and the BS (Bachelor of Science). The Department of Anthropology at the University of Arkansas comprises three separate disciplines – Cultural Anthropology, Biological Anthropology, and Archeology. The Department offers introductory courses in each subdiscipline, as well as a capstone course required for all anthropology majors. In order to bring the Department's assessment program in line with the College requirements, and in order to standardize assessment as much as possible across courses, the Anthropology Department revised its Assessment Plan in the Spring of 2020. This stands as the current assessment plan, including revision of student learning outcomes, re-evaluating the tools used for assessment, and instituting a formal plan for Departmental Program Assessment.

	Learning Outcomes	na	Because these disciplines represent a broad mixture of approaches spanning the humanities and sciences, the department has identified Student Learning Outcomes separately for each subdiscipline. A. Cultural Anthropology <ul style="list-style-type: none"> An appreciation of cultural diversity on both a local and global scale and how these diversities come into being and are theorized and communicated anthropologically. An understanding of the theoretical underpinnings of cultural anthropology, both in a historical context and in current practice, with an aim to articulating its key concepts, principles, and overarching scholarly contributions. An understanding of the role of anthropology in building intercultural knowledge and competence. An understanding of the breadth of approaches to understanding human cultural diversity, including not only classical ethnography, and its methods but fields such as visual anthropology, the anthropology of religion, the anthropology of identity, and more. An understanding of cultural variation and what value it has within anthropology and for neighboring disciplines and professions outside of the academy. A respect for cultural differences around the world. B. Archeology <ul style="list-style-type: none"> An understanding of the scope of archeological investigations on both local (Arkansas) and global scales. Knowledge of comparative studies of ancient human groups both across space and over time. An understanding of long-term culture change, from simple to complex forms and the reverse. An understanding of the human impact on the environment and how human societies cope with environmental change. An understanding of how archeological study informs not only the past, but also integrates with our understanding of the present (e.g., sustainability, political context, social interaction, cultural resource management, and heritage tourism). Knowledge of the techniques and skills necessary for modern archeological investigation, including using quantitative methods to make inferences about cultural behaviors. An understanding of the integration of archeological study with biological and cultural anthropological studies. C. Biological Anthropology <ul style="list-style-type: none"> An appreciation for human biological diversity, including physical form, local adaptation, environmental variation, and the origins of this diversity. An appreciation of human evolution and the biological origins of modern humans. An understanding of the techniques used to study human biology, past and present, including the comparative study of human form and behavior, including the genetic basis for human variation. Equip students with an understanding of the methods used to evaluate human remains in a bioarcheological context. Equip students with an understanding of the methods and approaches behind forensic anthropology. 	Description and justification of the request	Administrative update to courses for common course numbering conversion. Administrative update to courses for common course numbering conversion.	Removing tracks from degree program. (started last year but not completed in time for 2024-25 catalog.)\n\nRemoving references to 24 hour rule, which has been removed from ARSC catalog. The tracks were simply to keep track of what instrument students played. This record-keeping can be accomplished in other ways. The tracks did not indicate any curricular differences and they were not a meaningful designation within the guitar performance concentration.
